Law Library Touch Screen Kiosks

The Law Library Touch Screen is an Initiative developed to make legal research accessible to inmates – a requirement set forth by the courts. The kiosk is built rugged and durable, designed to withstand use in a high security environment. Through the simple use of its digital touch screen interface, the kiosk provides inmates access to a large legal database while simultaneously helping them develop both research and digital literacy skills.

Kiosks are available at every institution and are positioned in restricted movement areas, such as administrative segregation. The data can also be accessed on desktop computers located in the general population yard libraries.

The accessibility also proves beneficial to staff, who were often challenged with moving inmates, to provide inmates access to their research.

Its top priority is to provide rehabilitative programming and life skills to offenders in an effort to reduce their likelihood of reoffending after their release from prison. DRP is comprised of the Office of Offender Services (OS), the Office of Correctional Education (OCE), and the Office of Program Accountability and Support (OPAS).*
